RE: Johnson & Johnson Derivative Litigation

To Whom It May Concern:

I received notice of a class action lawsuit against Johnson & Johnson today, 22 September 2012.

This is a frivolous lawsuit obviously created as a simple money grab on the part of Plaintiff's Attorney. Johnson & Johnson is fully capable of making improvements to their operating practices to try and prevent further recalls and quality issues on their own. No one is more motivated to do that than they are and I am satisfied that that will happen without the help of and the cost of $10 million dollars for some attorney who knows nothing about running a business. Please take my name out of this class action suit.

My name is David K Stricker and Judith M Stricker.

As of 11 July 2012 we had 257 shares in a brokerage account. We currently own those same shares in a Fidelity Brokerage account. I see no reason why I have to provide brokerage statements to withdraw from a case I did not join in the first place. Obviously my stock ownership in Johnson & Johnson is already known and verified as evidence of this class action suit. Additionally I see no reason that I need to send multiple copies of this withdrawal to additional parties. I am not part of this case and see no reason for the time and effort and expense for case I never joined.

Additionally, I could not respond to this notice before 14 September 2012 as required by this notice when Plaintiff's Attorney had not even mailed it by then.

Thanks
